Original title

Interactive nanocar presentation

Abstract of thesis

The nanocar is a molecule that when stimulated can move linearly in one direction. This breakthrough technology can advance research in many fields of science, such as smart drugs and cancer treatments. Public knowledge about the nanocar however remains limited, as is demonstrated in this study. In this research internship a game and presentation is created with the goal of educating people about the nanocar and a study is conducted to measure the impact on users.
